

Contents

Table of Cases	xv
Table of Treaties and Legislation	xxv
List of Abbreviations	xxix

Introduction	1
Exploring the Constitutional and Social Dimensions of a Contested Fundamental Right	1
The Freedom to Conduct a Business as a Contested Fundamental Right	1
Constitutional Dimensions of the Freedom to Conduct a Business as a Fundamental Right	8
Social Dimensions of the Freedom to Conduct a Business as a Fundamental Right	11
Structure and Outline of Chapters	14

PART I. THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONTOURS OF BUSINESS FREEDOMS AND FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

1. The Fragmentary Constitutionalization of Rights, Freedoms, and (General) Principles	23
1.1 Introduction	23
1.2 General Principles as the Constitutional Cornerstone of the Fundamental Rights Edifice	24
1.2.1 The development of fundamental rights as general principles	24
1.2.2 The function of fundamental rights as general principles	27
1.2.3 The horizontal application of the general principles	31
1.3 The Charter as a Constrained Source of Fundamental Rights	33
1.3.1 The limited scope of application of the Charter	35
1.3.2 The relationship between the Charter and other sources of fundamental rights	39
1.4 The Charter as a Source of Fundamental Rights Heterogeneity	44
1.4.1 The distinction between rights and principles	44
1.4.2 The horizontal application of the Charter	56
1.5 Conclusion	62
2. The Deconstitutionalization of European Union Fundamental Rights in the United Kingdom	65
2.1 Introduction	65
2.2 The Role of the Charter During the United Kingdom's Membership of the European Union	66

2.3 The Status of European Union Fundamental Rights in the United Kingdom After Brexit	70
2.3.1 Fundamental rights and the United Kingdom's withdrawal from the European Union	70
2.3.2 The retention of European Union law within the domestic legal order	75
2.3.3 The assimilation of retained European Union law	79
2.4 Conclusion	85

PART II. THE RECONSTITUTION OF THE FREEDOM TO CONDUCT A BUSINESS AS A FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT

3. The Evolution of the Freedom to Conduct a Business as a Fundamental Right	91
3.1 Introduction	91
3.2 Business Freedoms as General Principles	92
3.2.1 The origins of business freedoms as general principles	92
3.2.2 Limitations on business freedoms as general principles	95
3.2.3 Reassessing the restrictions on business freedoms as general principles	99
3.2.3.1 Proportionality and public interest considerations	99
3.2.3.2 The essence of business freedoms as general principles	101
3.2.3.3 A (social) functional approach to the restriction of business freedoms as general principles	101
3.2.3.4 A critical appraisal of the restriction of business freedoms as general principles	107
3.3 The Freedom to Conduct a Business as a Charter 'Right'	114
3.3.1 The origins of the freedom to conduct a business as a Charter right	114
3.3.2 The content and status of the freedom to conduct a business	118
3.4 Reconciling the Sources of Business Freedoms as Fundamental Rights	123
3.4.1 The relationship between overlapping general principles and the Charter	123
3.4.1.1 The parallel application of the Charter and the general principles	124
3.4.1.2 The autonomous co-dependence of the Charter and the general principles	127
3.4.2 The relationship between the general principles and the Charter within the context of business freedoms	129
3.5 Conclusion	133

4. Competing Conceptions of the Freedom to Conduct a Business as a Fundamental Right	135
4.1 Introduction	135
4.2 A Restrictive Conception of the Freedom to Conduct a Business	136
4.3 An Expansive Conception of the Freedom to Conduct a Business	142
4.3.1 The tentative application of the freedom to conduct a business	142
4.3.2 The radical application of the freedom to conduct a business	145
4.3.3 Rationalizing the divergence between the dynamic and static approaches	150
4.4 The Meaning of Freedom of Contract in European Union Law	156
4.4.1 Freedom of contract as a regulatory technique	156
4.4.2 Autonomous conceptions of freedom of contract	163
4.5 Unravelling the Essence of the Freedom to Conduct a Business	172
4.5.1 Determining the essence of fundamental rights	172
4.5.2 Limitations on the essence of the freedom to conduct a business	179
4.6 Conclusion	186
 PART III. THE ENTRENCHMENT OF THE FREEDOM TO CONDUCT A BUSINESS AS A FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT
5. The Jurisprudential Significance of the Freedom to Conduct a Business as a Fundamental Right	191
5.1 Introduction	191
5.2 The Materiality of the Freedom to Conduct a Business in Judicial Reasoning	192
5.2.1 Congruence with the restrictive conception of the freedom to conduct a business	195
5.2.2 Parallel continuity with the expansive conception of the freedom to conduct a business	202
5.3 Coherence Within the Freedom to Conduct a Business as a Fundamental Right	212
5.3.1 The value of precedent in European Union law	214
5.3.2 Interpretative consistency and the freedom to conduct a business	220
5.4 Conclusion	224
6. The Systemic Implications of the Freedom to Conduct a Business as a Fundamental Right	226
6.1 Introduction	226
6.2 The Deregulatory Potential of the Freedom to Conduct a Business	227

xiv CONTENTS

6.2.1 The prioritization of the freedom to conduct a business in constitutional reasoning	230
6.2.2 The socialization of the freedom to conduct a business in constitutional reasoning	235
6.3 The Constitutional Embedment of the Freedom to Conduct a Business	244
6.4 Conclusion	260
Conclusion	262
Bibliography	269
Index	287